GENERAL McChellan, reared among the syrants and oppressors of mankfod, and deprived of all those enabling influences which usually surround the American youth from the cradle to the grave, has during his brief military career and his still briefer civil life, disapp in-

At the age of ten years he was arrested by the Mayor of Skowhegan for digging under the Corporation pound and extracting therefrom several porkers.

At fifteen years he was expelled from the Squabtown Militia by the colonel, who was an aide-decamp to the Governor Always on hand, and for sale at the length muches of Pennsylvania, for appropriating to himself a gold model which belonged to a poor flatbestman.

At twenty he was forced by the strength of public epinion to fly to the Canadas, where he endeavored to introduce spades into the drill of the English troops; but making a lamentable failure, he star ed, with Angustus Sala and Sir John Franklin, to search of fresh and pastur s new.

At twenty-two he returned to the Up ited States just in time to leave it, with a predatory band of merce aries, for Mexo, where the general, as he termed himsoil was, with his entire army of ninetythe millions of men and mules, ignound onsly put to flight by a corporal's guard of Mexicans. So affelighted was the reloubtable Little Mic that he imagined the buzging of the mesquetoes to be the cor of masketry assailing his rearguard. He dug a hole, and thus secured for himself a bass of supplies. When he charged upon the foe, he was twenty-five miles away, enting breakfast with Santa
